This is the 7th Irish Not-for-Profit Sector: Fundraising Performance Report prepared by 2into3. It provides a detailed overview of a representative sample of organisations and insights into their activities and experiences, especially in relation to fundraising.

This report estimates the total amount of fundraised income or philanthropy in Ireland in 2015 and takes into account the continuously evolving size of the sector in light of the Charities Regulatory Authority's registered list of charities and the Benefacts database. This year, the report also includes the funding model of the not-for-profit sector and of each subsector.

While Benefacts provides a strong starting point for information on the sector, it is still an under researched area. There is still a lack of quantitative information available on the Irish not-for-profit sector. This report highlights the critical importance of making improvements to the quality of data in the sector. There is a need for the sector to address this gap and to develop a knowledge base on which to benchmark and make decisions.

We hope that this report will stimulate debate, discussion and reflection and will encourage civic and private stakeholders to support the efforts of the sector in continuing to enhance fundraising performance.

September, 2017

Fundraised Income Increased by 6% in 2015, Driven by a Steep Rise in Donations to Religious Organisations.

The Irish Not-for-Profit Sector's Fundraised Income Totalled €823 Million in 2015

Average Cost to Raise €1 in 2015 was 29c

Staff Numbers Increased by 4%

State Funding as a % of Total Income in 2015 was 47.5%, an Increase of 4%

Ireland's Per Capita Giving is €176; €200 Less than of U.K. Giving Levels and nearly 5 Times Less than the U.S.¹

1. Key Findings are based on a small sample size and should be viewed with caution.

The not-for-profit sector plays a defining role in society. From universities and hospitals, to youth groups and sports clubs, individuals engage with not-for-profit organisations on a daily basis. Local needs are met by housing and social service charities, while international development organisations, advocacy groups and religious bodies strive for justice. Meanwhile, the arts, sports and other special interest groups entertain, educate and create. Whilst the not-for-profit sector shapes life in Ireland, it also reflects Irish society, revealing the priorities, passions and values of the national psyche.

Despite this, systematic research into the organisations that make up the Irish not-for-profit sector is scant and we know relatively little about the day-to-day realities faced by the not-for-profit sector. The dearth of information about the activities, income, expenditure and challenges faced by the not-for-profit sector stifles progress, ideas and advancements. Policy makers make decisions based on estimates, and CEOs and fundraising managers are unable to benefit from knowledge sharing and best practice of similar organisations. The ongoing dialogue about the importance of growing and supporting the not-for-profit sector runs the risk of sounding hollow if not supported by a strong empirical foundation. This report aims to bridge the knowledge gap somewhat by providing an insight into the composition of the sector and its status in 2015; especially in terms of fundraising activities, performance and cost. Our key aims are to provide objective information, to stimulate debate and discussion within and among organisations, and to encourage further analysis on this important sector.

There have been a number of advancements in the not-for-profit sector regarding the increase of regulatory measures and transparency. In 2014, the Charities Regulatory Authority was established with a key function to establish and maintain a public register of charitable organisations operating in Ireland and ensure their compliance with the Charities Act. In 2017, a further €1.7m was provided for additional staffing and other costs to enable the Authority strengthen its vital oversight roles and responsibilities under the Charities Act. This increase in funding occurred after the implementation of Part 4 of the Charities Act in 2016 which gave investigatory and enforcement powers to the Charities Regulator.

There is a more accurate picture of the Irish not-for-profit sector through the Register of Charities, which included 8,003 organisations at the end of 2016. Only organisations on this register are authorised to conduct charitable fundraising. Further information on not-for-profit organisations is also made available through Benefacts.

Organisations that qualify for charitable status are expected to comply with the Statement of Principles for Fundraising and specific Codes of Good Practice for Fundraising. Currently however, only a small number of organisations engage with these voluntary measures. Ambiguity still exists, as the Revenue Commissioners do not require an organisation to be incorporated before granting charitable tax exemption. The Wheel highlighted all charities in Ireland are legally required to register with the CRA and to have a charity registration number since October 2014 (The Wheel, 2016). Furthermore, sport is currently excluded from the remit of the 2009 Charities Act and is therefore not a charitable object.

The size of the not-for-profit sector is now more detailed as a result of the Charities Regulatory Authority's list of registered charities and the Benefacts database. The sample selected for this report is based on the adjusted classification and size of the not-for-profit sector as per Benefacts. This report is therefore not directly comparable to previous reports in this series.

Where possible a sample of 10% of organisations in each subsector was used. Due to lack of available accounts in Education, Research, as well as Recreation, Sports and Philanthropy, Voluntarism, the sample size of these subsectors was lowered to 3%. The total sample size then equates to 1,237 organisations or 6.5% of the total not-for-profit sector. In this study, a process called stratified random sampling is used to better depict the not-for-profit landscape in Ireland. This involves splitting the population of organisations into the subsectors in which they operate and taking a separate random sample from each of the subgroups rather than just a single random sample from the entire group. This process means that the relative size of each subsector is the same in both the sample and the population. Stratified sampling offers several advantages over simple random sampling, specifically it:

- Provides greater precision than a simple random sample of the same size
- Guards against an "unrepresentative" sample
- Provides sufficient sample sizes to support separate analyses of each subsector
- Ensures better coverage of the population than simple random sampling

Benefacts was used as a guide when randomly selecting the total population by subsector, determining how many organisations from each category should be included in the sample. Once the population was split into its component strata, listed organisations were systematically selected for inclusion in the sample. Organisations selected were then checked for available financial information and obtained from the Benefacts database and Vision-net.

Due to difficulty in accessing accounts that provide detailed financial information, the extent of representation regarding income level is unclear. Coupled with the small sample size, findings should be viewed with caution.

Extracting key data on fundraised income and cost is still very challenging. Annual accounts were not compiled with the intention of inclusion in this report's analysis, and in many cases very limited information on fundraising is provided. Some organisations present income in a more disaggregated format but combine sources of funding (e.g. income from events and corporate donations), or subsume fundraised income under another heading. Improvements in reporting have been found, however, with a large proportion of organisations categorising fundraised income as 'donations'. While this level of information cannot be disaggregated further, it does indicate an improvement on previous reporting structures and transparency.

To provide more detailed information on fundraising mix and cost, a second smaller sample of 25 organisations is included. These organisations responded to a survey and are anonymous. Unless explicitly stated otherwise, the figures presented in the report are from the main sample.

SORP Standards

Despite advancements regarding regulation and transparency in the not-for-profit sector, 27% of organisations filed abridged accounts in 2015 (Benefacts, 2017:19).

As per accounts filed in 2015, International, Health, and the Arts sectors are leaders in the adoption of SORP (Benefacts, 2017:9). However in the sector overall, under 10% report using SORP (Quinn, 2017:8).

Sample Overview

The not-for-profit sector is comprised of 12 subsectors, as identified by Benefacts. The sample used in this report mirrors the proportional representation of the subsectors by applying the stratified random sampling technique when selecting organisations.

As outlined below, Education, Research dominates the not-for-profit sector, accounting for over a quarter of all organisations in Ireland, followed by Recreation, Sports (17%) and Development, Housing (16%). The remaining subsectors are made up of a small number of organisations.

The Education, Research subsector dominated the not-for-profit sector both in size and income.

Education, Research followed by Recreation, Sports dominated the not-for-profit sector, accounting for 27% and 16% respectively of the total population. Health represented a small portion of organisations present within the sector, accounting for 4% of the entire population. However, this representation of Health organisations changes significantly when the size of the sector is analysed by income as opposed to number of organisations.

When analysed by income size, Education, Research still dominated the landscape accounting for 33.5% of total income. The Health subsector as well as Recreation, Sports presented the most dramatic disparity between income and number of organisations. While accounting for only 4% of organisations in the not-for-profit sector, Health yielded 21.3% of total income. Comparatively, Recreation, Sports amounted to only 1.8% of total income, despite representing 16% of the not-for-profit sector. Only 2 subsectors present a similar share of total income when compared to the number of organisations.

Health and Education, Research account for more than half (54.8%) of total income. The uneven distribution of income compared to the size of each sector can be seen below.

Sample Size: 1237

Sample Size: 1237

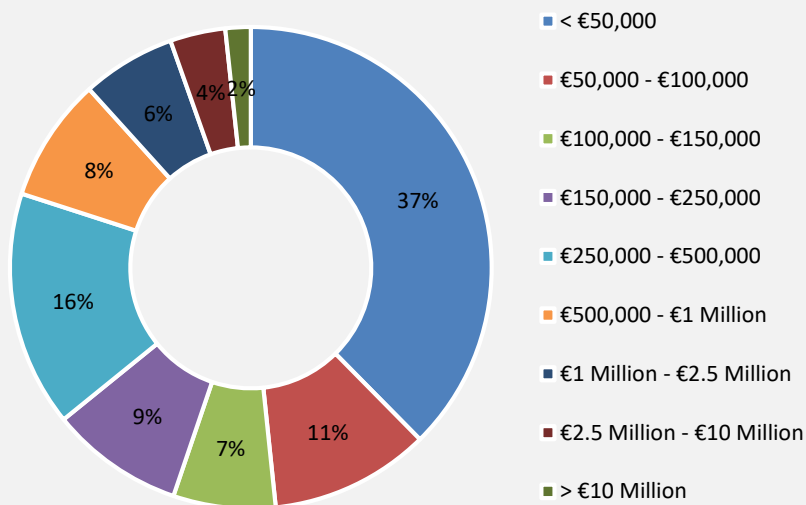

Nearly half of organisations in the not-for-profit sector had income less than €100,000.

48% of organisations had income below €100,000 in 2015. The bottom-heavy nature of the not-for-profit sector is also found in the U.K. where 83% of organisations had income of £100,000 or less (NVCO, 2017:14). Comparatively, 12% of Irish not-for-profit organisations reported income of €1 million or above, whereas in the U.K. organisations of this size represented 3% of the sector. During this period, the U.K not-for-profit sector experienced an increase in the number of very large charities with an income above £100m (NVCO, 2017:14).

The heterogeneous nature of the sector becomes clear in the Summary Statistics below. Although the average income in 2015 was €990,900, only 11.7% of organisations reported income above the average figure. The median was just €110,783, indicating that a number of large organisations inflated the average income level. There is a clear disparity of income between the lowest and highest income brackets within the not-for-profit sector, with a number of particularly small and very large organisations featuring in this sample.

Benefacts cite that the current total income figure of the not-for-profit sector from which data is available totalled €10.9 billion in 2015. The lack of financial information across subsectors and the high number of abridged accounts hinders the ability to definitively identify the size of the sector at this time and its contribution to GNP. It is 2into3's estimate that when the complete data is available and compiled for all subsectors, the total size will be in the region of previous estimations by the authors (see 2into3, 2015).

Fundraising accounted for 10% of the not-for-profit sector's funding model.

The not-for-profit sector's funding model consists of three sources; state, earned and fundraised income. The funding model of organisations however varies significantly by subsector as well as organisation size. Figure 6 illustrates the funding model for the not-for-profit sector. State funding accounted for the largest proportion of income (55%) while fundraising accounted for 10%. Earned income includes box office and ticket sales, for example, and generated 34% of total income.

Sample Size: 687

There is considerable variation between subsectors. Social Services and Health organisations deliver a wide variety of services for government, receiving nearly 77% and 72% of their funding from this source, respectively. Professional, Vocational and Recreation, Sports reported earned income as a significant part of their funding model at 77% and 73% respectively. Philanthropy, Voluntarism organisations which include foundations also received very little income from government (10%), but receive 76% of their income from fundraising. Religious organisations had a similar funding model with 73% of income sourced from fundraising. The funding models for each subsector can be found overleaf. Organisations were grouped below based on the particular funding source that is most prominent in their funding Model.

State Income accounted for 47.5% of total income, an increase of 4% compared to 2014.

In 2015, State Income accounted for 47.5% of total income, which indicates a high reliance on not-for-profit organisation to deliver necessary services to its citizens. Indeed, it was found that Health and Social Services received proportionally more state income than other subsectors. Comparatively, Religion and Philanthropy, Voluntarism received the smallest contribution. In the U.K., statutory bodies accounted for 33% of total income (NCVO, 2017:32).

In 2015 state income increased by 4% when compared to 2014. Strong subsectoral differences were found however with Religion recording the highest increase in state income as a proportion of total income (60%). This increase is attributable to one outlier, once removed the increase is 5%. Recreation, Sports’ state income reduced by 20% and was experienced across this subsector.

State support is recovering, however the funding landscape will change with the implementation of the Public Service Reform Plan (2014-2016) towards a ‘new approach based on releasing funds in return for delivering specified outcomes’ (DPER, 2014:15). After public consultation on commissioning in 2016, DPER is considering how best to align and integrate a commissioning approach with existing expenditure policy (DPER, 2017). Such measures may impact on the proportion of state funding received by the sector and for specific subsectors.

Not-for-profit staffing levels increased, yet the majority of organisations employed 5 staff or less.

53% of organisations in the not-for-profit sector employed 5 or less staff in 2015, as outlined in the graph below. Organisations with more than 50 members of staff totalled 6%.

Disparity in the sector was also found with regards to staffing levels. On average, organisations employed 19 staff members, almost four times the median of 5. 81% of organisations had staff levels below the identified average.

Social Service organisations received 22c of every €1 raised in Ireland, in 2015.

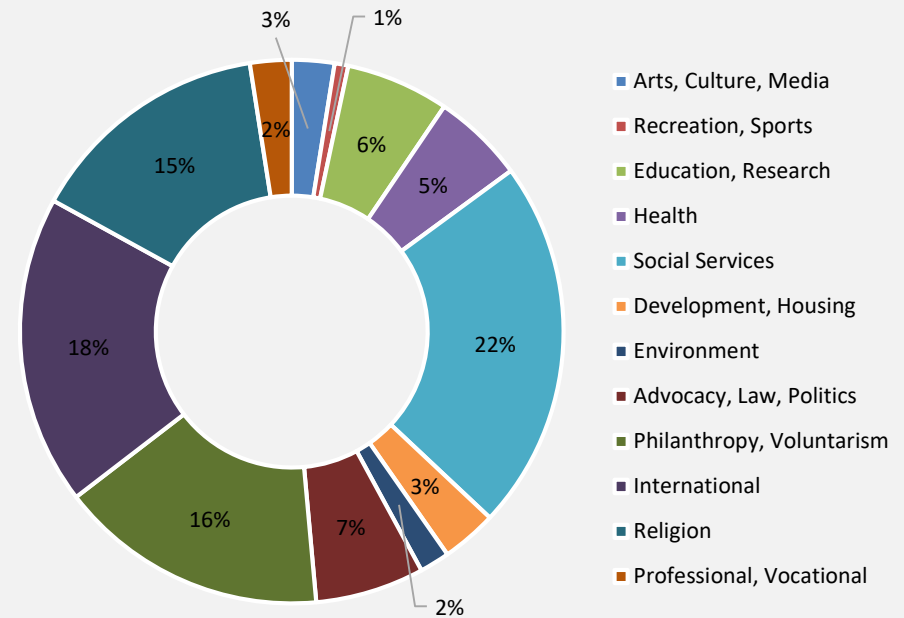

Both nationally and internationally, Ireland is viewed as having a generous population, consistently ranking highly in the World Giving Index. In 2015 Ireland moved down the rankings to 9th most generous nation (Charities Aid Foundation, 2016:11). The percentage of Irish people who donated to charity dropped to 66% in 2015 compared to 74% in 2014 (Charities Aid Foundation, 2016:20). Ireland however maintained its reputation by ranking within the top 10 in 2015.

As indicated in the methodology, many sets of accounts are abridged or income is presented in aggregate. The result is that fundraised income and its sources are underreported. Only a small number of organisations in our sample gave additional information. It is on this small group that this analysis is carried out.

As illustrated in Figure 11, Social Services received 22c of every €1 raised in 2015, while International organisations received 18c of every €1. Philanthropy, Voluntarism as well as Religion also received a significant proportion of total fundraised income of 16% and 15% respectively. The remaining subsectors received a similar share of fundraised income. While Recreation, Sports organisations only contribute 1% of total fundraised income, this subsector’s potential may not be fully reached as sport is currently excluded from the remit of the 2009 Charities Act.

Sample Size: 1216

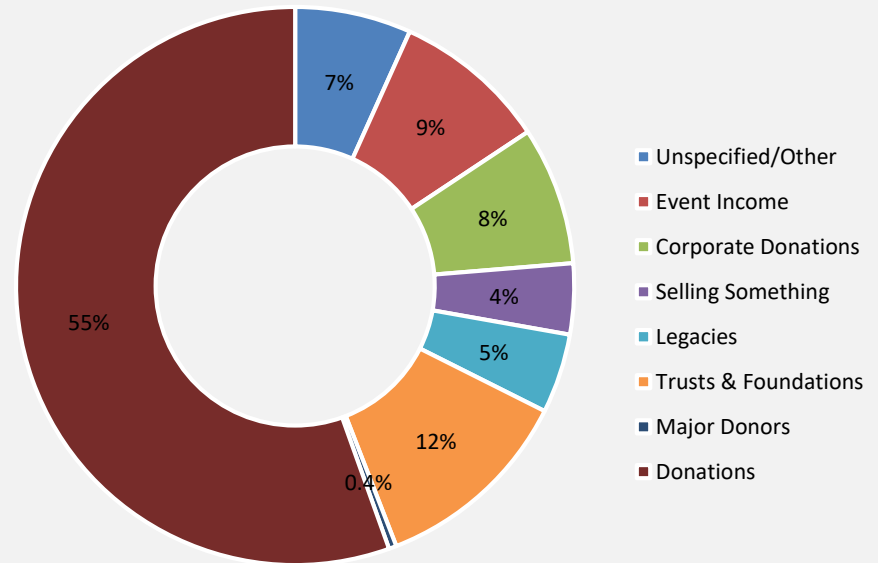

Income from Trusts and Foundations was significant, accounting for 12% of total fundraised income.

A wide range of techniques are used to raise funds in the not-for-profit sector. These include Direct Mail, Local and Community fundraising including events, soliciting Major Gifts, Regular and Committed Giving, Corporate Donations and Selling Items. Implementation of each method requires a different skillset, time commitment and investment. Each organisation must identify what range of fundraising techniques best meets their funding needs and capacity, measured in terms of overall income. The composition of the fundraising mix is also dependent on the subsector and the specific cause of the organisation. This report identifies the fundraising mix of the not-for-profit sector, as reported in annual accounts. Efforts were made to disaggregate information where possible to allow for the richest data possible, fundraised income and income by method continues to be under-reported in annual accounts.

For organisations for which data is available, 55% of fundraised income was reported as ‘donations’. Further detail as to the type of donation or method used is unknown. Moreover, 7% of fundraised income was unspecified. For fundraising methods that have been specified in the annual accounts, contributions from Trusts and Foundations were significant as this method accounted for 12% of total fundraised income in 2015. Similarly, income from Foundations accounted for 15% of total fundraised income in the U.K. in 2015 (Pharoah, 2016:4).

The majority of fundraised income was raised through relationship fundraising methods.

In order to provide a more detailed analysis of the fundraising mix, a survey of 25 organisations was conducted. Figure 13 then illustrates a more detailed picture of the fundraising mix of the sector compared to details reported in annual accounts.

The majority of fundraised income for the survey sample was derived from relationships, in particular, Regular/Committed Giving (35%) and Direct Marketing Appeals (18%). Divergence from more traditional fundraising methods is clear as Local/Community Fundraising accounted for 9% of total receipts, while Selling Something represented 7%. Relationship fundraising methods totalled 56% of receipts. Income deriving from Emergency DM Appeals was attributable to the occurrence of humanitarian and natural disasters.

The diversity in the sector in relation to size and use of fundraising methods can result in one organisation skewing the overall findings. A systematic approach to gathering evidence on the fundraising landscape is required to inform and benchmark effectiveness. The knowledge gap between Ireland and the U.K. surrounding the not-for-profit sector has narrowed as a result of Benefacts. However there are still gaps in sectoral knowledge on the Irish fundraising landscape. This was recently acknowledged in the Critical Fundraising Report (Murphy, 2017) in which task group members advocated for more evidence-informed fundraising decision making, including participation in benchmarking to share information and insights on fundraising performance.

Fundraised Income: International Comparisons

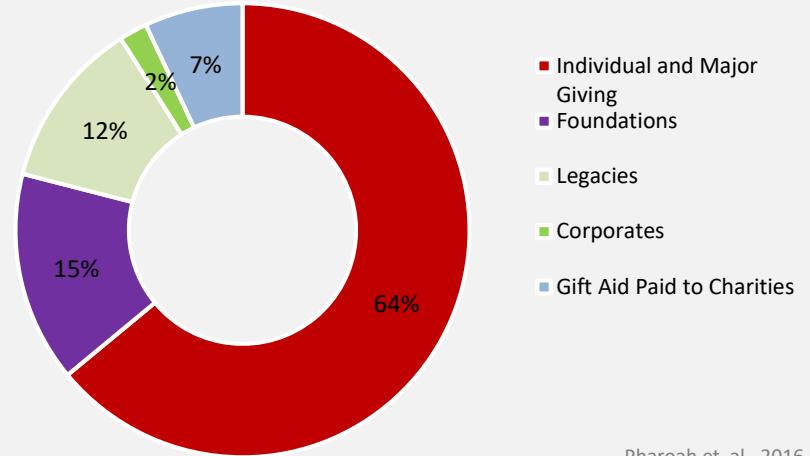

Ireland received a slightly larger proportion of income from individuals compared to the U.S. and U.K.

Individual donations dominated the U.S. fundraising mix. According to the recent Giving U.S.A. report, individual donations made up 70% of U.S. contributions in 2015.

Individual donations were also found to dominate the U.K. fundraising mix, totalling £20.6 billion in 2015 (NCVO, 2017).

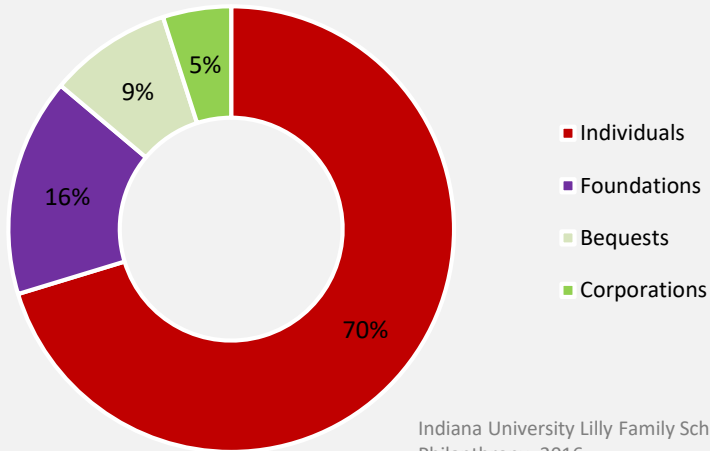

When compared to Figure 16, similarities between the Irish fundraising mix and that of the U.S. and U.K. emerge. With 77% of fundraised income in Ireland received from individuals, it is found that Ireland received a slightly higher proportion of this form of income when compared to the U.K. and the U.S..

Fundraised income increased by 6% in 2015, driven by a steep rise in donations to Religious organisations.

In 2015, fundraised income increased by 6% on average. While percentage comparisons depicted a more dramatic shift in fundraised income, the monetary increase was €5.6 million. As outlined in the summary statistics table, the experience of the sector differs significantly by organisation and by subsector. The majority of organisations in this sample (50.7%) experienced a decrease in fundraised income. However, the steep increase by certain subsectors, in particular Religion, determined an overall increase. Only 4 subsectors experienced an increase while International remained flat despite the number of humanitarian and natural appeals in 2015.

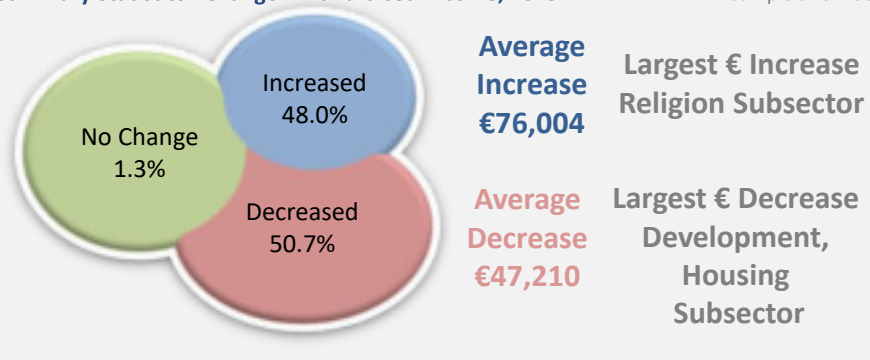

As seen in Figure 17, Religion had the largest average monetary increase of €119,580; meanwhile, the largest average monetary decrease was experienced by Environment. The subsector that underwent the least change was International, where the average monetary decrease was €26.

Summary Statistics: Change in Fundraised Income, 2015

Sample Size: 450

While a large number of organisations experienced a decrease in fundraised income, an overall increase in fundraised income was found. This is despite the scandals and lack of trust reported during this period. In a recent analysis on a small number of charities, Boss (2015) found that organisations with good governance and transparency were in a better position to respond to the scandals that faced the sector in 2014-2015 and subsequently experienced minimal consequences. These organisations focused on improving governance, strengthening donor trust and moved away from attracting new donors towards retention approaches.

The costs associated with fundraised income remain significantly underreported, proving difficult to provide an appropriate breakdown of fundraising costs using the main cohort of organisations. Reporting administrative, overhead and fundraising costs is necessary, however organisations may be cautious in doing so, especially following the series of scandals in recent years, coupled with unrealistic expectations about the cost of running charities (Amarach, 2016). The introduction of mandatory SORP reporting in 2018 will improve transparency and indeed evidence on the cost of fundraising for the sector. Such a move will also address the public's interest in hearing more from charities about how donations are used (Amarach, 2017).

Zero fundraising costs are an illusion and a proper level of investment in overheads and staff is required to ensure ongoing organisational efficiency, effectiveness and sustainability, and to attract and retain staff. While low costs are always preferable, especially with regards to fundraising and administration, the relationship between efficiency and cost ratios is in no way linear. In this regard, the findings displayed in this report should not be perceived or interpreted as equating low fundraising costs with organisational effectiveness or organisational quality.

More practical limitations of the summary 'cost to raise a euro' measure include:

- Poor quality data is available from annual accounts
- Organisational fundraising outcomes are not explicitly fundraising activities i.e. media based raising awareness
- Large annual fluctuations of fundraised income and investment results in figures that may not be representative of an organisation's actual position
- Fundraising costs are correlated with a range of organisational characteristics including size, cause, capacity and age

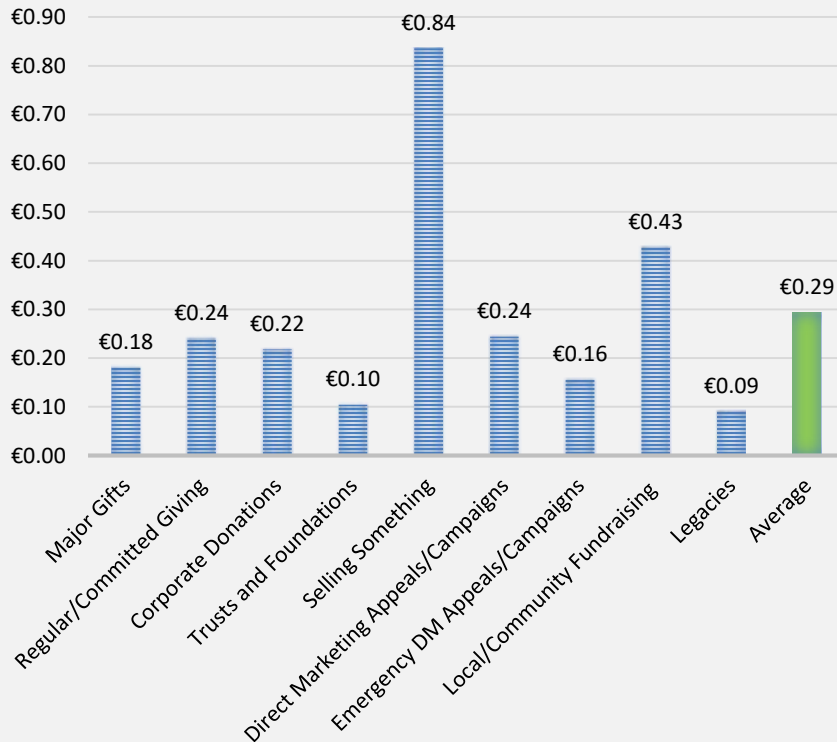

The number of organisations providing detailed information on costs relative to their fundraising techniques is very low, but it is still a fair representation of the experiences of the sector. In 2015, 25 organisations provided detailed information regarding their cost to raise €1, enabling 2into3 to provide the sector with an estimation of the fundraising costs associated with each method. Nonetheless, the fundraising cost is, at best, an estimate based on a small, non-random sample and should be viewed with caution.

Fundraising Costs

In 2015, it cost 29c to raise €1. Selling Something was costly, while Legacies were the most cost effective.

Sample Size:25

The cost of Fundraising varies across different techniques, and in 2015 the average cost to raise €1 was 29c. Selling Something was the most costly method requiring 84c to raise €1. Legacies and Trusts and Foundations were found to be the most cost effective methods, followed by Emergency Direct Marketing Appeals.

The low cost of Emergency Direct Marketing Appeals was the result of philanthropic responses to humanitarian and natural disasters in 2015.

As previously outlined, the fundraising landscape in Ireland differs to that of the U.K. These differences are even more apparent when compared to the U.S. Therefore, while international costs of fundraising are illustrated below, the fundraising landscape and therefore the related costs are not directly comparable with Ireland.

29c invested = €1 raised in Ireland

18p invested = £1 raised in U.K. (NCVO, 2012)

20c invested = $1 raised in U.S. (Greenfield, 1999)

Estimated GDP and Per Capita Equivalent

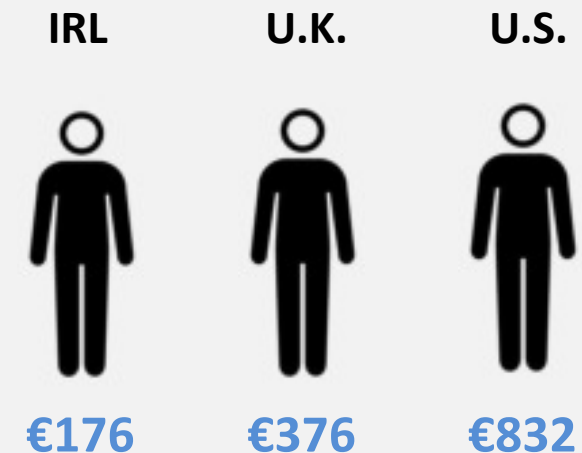

Ireland's fundraised income reached €823 million in 2015, but giving per capita is €200 less than U.K. levels.

Fundraised income in Ireland in 2015 totalled €98.7 million. The cohort of organisations that make up the sample of this report is representative of the not-for-profit sector in 2015, and can, therefore, be extrapolated to depict the overall sectoral experience. In our effort to ensure the best possible representation of the sector, the top 1% of this cohort was removed from the extrapolation. Figures presented in this part of the report should be viewed with caution due to the underreporting and lack of information particularly surrounding this form of income. With these caveats in place, it is estimated that the Irish not-for-profit sector's fundraised income totalled €823 million in 2015. Fundraised income contributed 0.3% to Irish GDP in 2015, a very low percentage especially when compared to the 2.1% U.S. contribution.

This report estimates that Ireland's rate of giving per capita was €176 in 2015, €200 lower than in the U.K. at €376. According to the Indiana University Lilly Family School of Philanthropy (2016), 2015 was America's most generous year ever, reaching a per capita giving level of €832. While Ireland is generous by frequency of giving, the quantum of gift still lags behind its international counterparts.

Summary Statistics: Per Capita Giving, 2015

Adjusted GDP and Per Capita Equivalent

Fundraised Income increased by 6%, while per capita giving remained flat.

Estimates for GDP are adjusted to better reflect patterns occurring in economic activity. In this way, experts ensure that seasonal patterns are accounted for, as more information becomes available. As the sample in this report differs from last year's report, it is necessary to adjust the estimates of GDP and per capita giving to accurately compare the same organisations. It is the authors' estimate that fundraised income contributed 0.4% to GDP in 2014 and 0.3% in 2015.

When extrapolated to depict overall sectoral experience, fundraised income increased in 2015 yielding €823 million compared to €811 million raised in 2014. Per capita giving remained flat at €176, increasingly only by 24c. This is due to an increase in population, which ultimately lowered the level of per capita giving.

Sample Size: 1216

Subsectoral differences can also be identified when it comes to per capita giving levels, as Figure 19 illustrates. Social Services and International received the highest per capita contribution at €36.95 and €31.67 respectively. Recreation, Sport received the lowest per capita contribution at €1.76. This sector however engages a significant volunteer base of some 500,000 (Federation of Irish Sport, 2015).

Ireland's tax incentive to give is at odds with practically all developed economies.

For the third year in a row, this report has found that giving levels are at least half that of the U.K. Figure 20 is adapted from a previous version of this report and provides explanations as to this variance.

There are a number of factors which could explain the difference in per capita giving levels in the U.K. and Ireland. Ireland has the least amount of charitable Trusts and Foundations in Europe whereas the U.K. has some 8,800 (Association of Charitable Foundations, 2007). Notwithstanding the number of Trusts and Foundations in the U.K, this form of giving accounted for €57 of per capita giving in 2015. There is also a degree of intergenerational wealth in the U.K not yet present in Ireland which may impact on the gap in giving.

The giving culture in the U.K. is more developed and therefore there is more planned giving compared to Ireland. Most countries offer incentives at 100% of the value of income tax; the donor and/or the charity can then claim or be exempt from 100% of the tax that has been paid or would be paid on the amount donated (Charities Aid Foundation, 2016). The level of incentive in Ireland is at odds with not only the U.K. but practically all developed economies.

The culture of giving is further cultivated in the U.K. through a Gift Aid scheme where the tax incentive is split between the donor and the charity whereas in Ireland only the charity receives the benefit of the incentive.

The significant difference between the U.K. and Irish tax code in relation to philanthropic giving is one of the factors affecting Irish giving levels.

Ireland is also unusual in being one of the few developed economies which caps the incentive. Most countries, including the U.K., set no annual limit for the value of donation by a taxpayer on which the tax paid is reclaimable.

For Legacy donations, the U.K. offers a specific incentive where 10% or more of an estate is donated there is a 4% reduction on the tax paid on the entire estate. In Ireland no such incentive exists.

Ireland also uses a floor, set at €250, before any incentive applies whereas the U.K. has no minimum level. In fact, no developed economy, apart from Ireland, sets a minimum donation amount (Charities Aid Foundation, 2016).

| <ul style="list-style-type: none"> No personal benefit is available on individual donations in Ireland Tax schemes benefit charities and U.K. donors |
| <ul style="list-style-type: none"> The value of a corporate donation is deducted at the corporation rate of tax in Ireland Corporate donations are deducted from total profits before tax in the U.K. |

Conclusion

This report is designed to provide an overview of the status of the not-for-profit sector in 2015. The motivation behind the report is to provide objective information, stimulate debate and discussion and encourage more detailed reporting of fundraising data.

This report found that fundraised income increased in 2015 for the sixth consecutive year, rising by 6% compared to 2014. In the context of the charity scandals in 2014-2015, which influenced wider public perception of charities, it appears that fundraised income was not as negatively impacted as initially expected.

It is important to note however that these results and all those in the report, whether at a sector or subsector level, hide the true level of diversity amongst the experience of not-for-profit organisations in 2015. Whilst empirical research is essential to identify best practice and to benchmark performance, Trustees, CEOs, donors and civil society should remain cognisant of the heterogeneity even within each subsector. Thus, although the results may assist in guiding discussion, the fact that each not-for-profit is so specific and distinct in history, structure, function, staffing levels, sector interest and funding model, must be to the forefront of any decision making.

The key results arising from this report are that the Irish not-for-profit sector had a 6% increase in fundraised income between 2014 and 2015. The total income generated from philanthropic sources amounted to €823m in 2015, with the average cost to raise €1 estimated at 29c. Ireland's giving per capita was €176 in 2015, €200 less than that of the U.K., indicating that while the sector shows continuous growth, Ireland has continued scope to increase its charitable giving by learning from the U.K.

The Community Foundation for Ireland is a philanthropic organisation which seeks just and progressive social change. It provides a long-term source of independent funding for the community and voluntary sector, mostly in Ireland. The Foundation empowers people who want to make a difference through a model of philanthropy that is based on trust, effectiveness and impact by helping donors to cause sustainable change. The Foundation currently manages over 60 donor advised funds. The Foundation awards grants from its own funds in addition to the grants it administers on behalf of others. 2016 was a record-breaking year. The Foundation made grants of almost €6million and reached the milestone of €30million in cumulative grants since establishment in 2000. The Foundation has built an endowment fund of over €40 million. See www.foundation.ie for more information.
