Foreword

This is the fifth annual Fundraising Performance Report prepared by 2into3 for the Irish notfor-profit sector. It provides a detailed overview of a representative sample of organisations and provides insights into their activities and experiences, especially in relation to fundraising.

This report estimates both the size of the not-for-profit sector and the total amount of fundraised income or philanthropy in Ireland, in 2013. The sector is important economically yet under researched. Charitable giving is a significant source of income, and rose for the fourth year in succession in 2013 yet lags behind the U.K on a per capita basis and as a proportion of GDP. For the first time, this report outlines differences as to why charitable giving is higher in the U.K which may prompt discussion on how, and to what extent, this gap can be bridged.

There is still a significant dearth of quantitative information available on the Irish not-forprofit sector. This report highlights the critical importance of making improvements to the quality of data in the sector and we look forward to the impact of the Charities Regulatory Authority on the availability of information on all not-for-profits.

We hope that this report will stimulate debate, discussion and reflection and will encourage civic and private stakeholders to support the efforts of the sector in continuing to increase fundraising performance.

Executive Summary

Despite its importance in terms of GDP, employment and provision of services and facilities, there is a significant dearth of quantitative information available on the Irish not-for-profit sector. Lack of data hinders effectiveness and efficiency by making it difficult for organisations to benchmark themselves against the rest of the sector, to identify best practice or to develop appropriate fundraising targets.

This report is based on the annual accounts of a representative sample of Irish not-for-profit organisations and is an attempt to provide a quantitative insight into the current status of the sector, especially in relation to fundraising performance and costs. The aim of the report is to provide objective information, to stimulate debate and discussion among and within organisations and to promote more open and detailed reporting of fundraising data.

Key findings from the report are presented below:

Key Findings
Estimated total income of the not-for-profit sector in 2013	€12.4 billion
Estimated size of the fundraising market in 2013	€740 million
% change in fundraised income between 2012 and 2013	+0.8%
Estimated rate of charitable giving per capita	€161
Average cost to raise €1 in 2013	28 cents*
State funding as a % of total income in 2013	63%
Change in state funding between 2012 and 2013	-1%
Salaries as a % of total expenditure in 2013	45%
Estimated contribution of the sector in GNP in 2013	9.1%

* Estimates based on a small, non-random sample and should be viewed with caution. See Section 4.4

1 Introduction

The not-for-profit sector plays a defining role in society. From universities and hospitals, to youth groups and sports clubs, individuals engage with not-for-profit organisations on a daily basis. Local needs are met by housing and social service charities, while international development organisations, advocacy groups and religious bodies strive for justice. Meanwhile, art, sports and other special interest groups entertain, educate and create. Whilst the not-for-profit sector shapes life in Ireland it also reflects Irish society, revealing the priorities, passions and values of our national psyche.

Despite this, systematic research into the organisations that make up the Irish third sector is scant and we know relatively little about the day-to-day realities faced by the not-for-profit sector. The dearth of information about the activities, income, expenditure and challenges faced by the not-for-profit sector stifles progress, ideas and advancements. Policy makers make decisions based on estimates, and CEOs and fundraising managers are unable to benefit from knowledge sharing and best practice of similar organisations. The on-going dialogue about the importance of growing and supporting the not-for-profit sector runs the risk of sounding hollow if not supported by a strong empirical foundation. This report aims to bridge the knowledge gap somewhat by providing an insight into the composition of the sector and its status in 2013; especially in terms of fundraising activities, performance and cost. Our key aims are to provide objective information, to stimulate debate and discussion within and among organisations, and to encourage further analysis of this important sector.

1.1 Regulation of Not-for-Profit Organisations

There are a number of challenges associated with obtaining an accurate picture of the Irish not-for-profit sector. Even determining the population of not-for-profit organisations is quite difficult. In Ireland, charitable status does not exist as a legal concept and there is currently no record of Irish not-for-profits. This ambiguity will be addressed by the now established Charities Regulatory Authority (CRA) and through the Register of Charities. Once compiled, only organisations on this register can conduct charitable fundraising. Unlike in England, Wales and Northern Ireland, sport is excluded from the remit of the 2009 Charities Act. Sports clubs or organisations that engage in fundraising will then be able to continue to fundraise without registering with the CRA as they do not qualify for charitable status (Federation of Irish Sports, 2013).

Organisations that qualify for charitable status will be expected to comply with a Statement of Principles for Fundraising and specific Codes of Good Practice for Fundraising, once developed. Currently however, there is a lack of clarity about the boundaries and composition of the sector. Organisations can register with the Companies Registration Office, but are not obliged to do so; the Revenue Commissioners do not require an organisation to be incorporated before granting charitable tax exemption. Organisations that are granted charitable tax exemption are allocated a CHY number, however, having a charity number does not equate to being a registered charity.

In 2009, the Charities Act was enacted to address the lack of regulation in the sector. The individual provisions of the Act will be implemented in stages and include:

- The creation of a register of all charities operating in the State, including charities from outside the State who wish to operate in Ireland. The Charity Register will be made available to the public online.
- A definition of charitable purposes for the first time in primary legislation.

- The establishment of a Charities Regulatory Authority designed to ensure compliance and encourage the better administration of charities.
- Charities will be required to submit an Annual Activity Report to the new Authority.
- Statutory accounting and audit (or independent examination) obligations imposed on all charities which are not incorporated under the Companies Acts. The Companies Acts continue to apply to charities incorporated under those Acts.

Since its establishment in October 2014, the CRA has not yet reached its potential in implementing the above provisions, mostly due to a lack of resources. In April 2015 the Minister for Justice, Frances Fitzgerald, received a submission from the CRA to extend the deadline for registration of charities by twelve months. The Authority stated that, as of April 2015, approximately 200 organisations had initiated the registration process. However, with the recent implementation of a simplified process for registration and preparation of Annual Reports coupled with the addition of eight new staff members, charities will receive additional supports to meet the April 2016 deadline.

2 Data used in this Analysis

A complete list of the 7,090 not-for-profit organisations registered with the Companies Registration Office was supplied to 2into3 by INKEx in 2012. As each of these organisations is incorporated, they are obliged to submit their annual accounts to the Companies Registration Office. These accounts can be accessed by the public¹. This list comprises of 3,636 entities with a charity number and 3,454 without. INKEx classified each organisation into one of the 12 subsectoral groups devised by the Johns Hopkins Comparative Nonprofit Sector Project, a classification system now adopted by the UN. As part of a previous report in this series (see 2into3, 2014), this categorisation was analysed in detail by 2into3 resulting in a number of organisations initially classified as Philanthropic Intermediaries and Voluntarism Promotion being reclassified. The re-categorised INKEx classification is used in this report. A further list of 3,810 organisations was supplied by the Revenue Commissioners; a large number of which were found to be incorporated since its drafting in 2009. This indicates a trend that more not-for-profits are becoming incorporated over time.

Data is very difficult to obtain on unincorporated not-for-profits. Until the provisions within the Charities Act 2009 are fully implemented, they are under no regulatory obligation to make financial statements publically available, and, for reasons of confidentiality, Revenue will only publish information on their registered name, charity number and registered address. However, a large number of organisations are incorporated and their accounts available. As seen in Table 1, a stratified random sample of not-for-profit organisations was constructed. The sample reflects the sectoral makeup of the not-for-profit sector as given by the INKEx report. However, due to difficulty in accessing the accounts of unincorporated organisations we believe that there is an overrepresentation of larger unincorporated bodies indicating that any computed figures will be upper bound.

Three samples of organisations were used in this study. The main sample used comprises of 8% of all not-for-profits in Ireland. The second is a 26% sample of all organisations with total incoming resources exceeding €1 million. The third is a small sample of organisations with a total income exceeding €1 million that responded to an anonymous survey.

A representative sample of 100 large organisations was invited to participate in this survey, of which 27 responded. Unless explicitly stated otherwise, the figures presented in the report are for the main sample. Stratified random sampling was used to ensure that the samples can be extrapolated and are representative of their respective populations. This technique is explained in detail in Appendix A.

2.1 Data Collection Challenges

Unfortunately, even when accounts are obtained, extracting key data about fundraised income and costs of not-for-profits is still very challenging. Naturally, annual accounts were not compiled with the intention of inclusion in our analysis, and in many cases very limited information on fundraising is provided. As INKEx (2012) note, the Accounting Standards Board permits income to be reported as a single line. However, such an aggregated format does not permit analysis of income sources. Some organisations present their income in a more disaggregated format but combine sources of funding (e.g. income from events and corporate sponsorship), or subsume fundraised income under another heading. Moreover, the level of detail provided by some organisations changes each year. While some organisations have engaged in more transparent and detailed reporting, others have significantly reduced the information provided. These inconsistencies in reporting impacted on the availability of accurate comparative data, resulting in a large proportion of the sample being replaced. Thus the subsequent findings outlined should be seen in isolation from previous reports in this series.

Only a very small proportion of organisations utilise the Statement of Recommended Practice for Charities (SORP) standards when preparing their accounts; INKEx (2012) estimate 3% while The Wheel (2014) found a higher figure of 10%. These standards require a high level of detail regarding sources of income and are mandatory for charities in the U.K

but optional in the Republic of Ireland. Most organisations (76%), however, follow the advice of their accountants in terms of the standard used to prepare annual accounts (The Wheel, 2014). Moreover, between 2011 and 2012, over a third of the not-for-profit sector was found to be aware of the Statement of Guiding Principles for Fundraising, and among those the majority applied the principles (The Wheel, 2014).

2.2 Average vs. Median

The Irish not-for-profit sector is highly heterogeneous, comprising of a large number of small organisations and a very small number of extremely large bodies. This diversity has an impact on the validity of certain summary statistics; in particular the use of average figures can be quite misleading. Instead, a more appropriate metric to use is the median.

Average: To find the average, all observations are added up, and divided by the number of observations. However, this means that if a few numbers are particularly high or low ('outliers') they will have a disproportionate effect on the calculated average, pulling it up or down.

Median: The median is simply the value separating the upper half of a set of numbers from the lower half. The median is calculated by arranging all of the observations from lowest to highest value and selecting the middle value. As such, it is not affected by especially high or low outliers.

Where appropriate, both the median and average figures are reported. The proportion of observations that lie above and below the average will also be noted. These figures will give some indication of the severity of the diversity: in an even distribution, 50% of the observations should lie above the average, and 50% below.

This diversity is particularly evident in relation to income and staff numbers, as can be seen in Sections 3.3 and 3.6.

3 Overview of Sample

3.1 Division into Subsectors

Organisations were divided into one of 12 subsectors by INKEx. Where we deemed it appropriate, organisations within the Philanthropic Intermediaries and Voluntarism Promotion category were reclassified. Organisations included in the sample were identified using the process of stratified random sampling. This means that the proportion of organisations in each subsector is the same for both the sample and the entire population of firms. Figure 1 below shows the proportion of organisations by subsector. Development and Housing is the largest subsector, comprising of over a quarter of not-for-profits in Ireland, and therefore the largest in our sample. The Culture and Recreation and Social Services subsectors are also very significant, with each accounting for one in five organisations. The remaining subsectors are made up of a relatively small number of organisations.

This pattern changes significantly when subsector size is determined by income rather than number of organisations. While the Development and Housing subsector stays the largest, accounting for more than one in every four euro of total income, the Education and Research subsector is also very significant, accounting for 25% of the total, with Health organisations yielding 21%.

Sample Size: 856

When comparing the size of subsector by number of organisations and income, some Education and Research organisations appear very large, because, although they only account for 4% of the organisations in the sample, they receive one quarter of total income. By contrast, although one in every five organisations is in the Culture and Recreation space, between them they only account for 2% of income. This pattern is clearly shown in Figure 3 which illustrates the proportion of total income and total organisations accounted for by each subsector. It is very clear that the average income of organisations varies across subsector and, apart from the Development and Housing subsector, does not correspond with the size of the sector. This is particularly the case for the Culture and Recreation subsector and the Education and Research subsector.

Sample Size for % of Total Income: 856 Sample Size for % of Total Organisations: 872

3.2 Age of Organisations

The average age of organisations in our main sample is 20.6 years. However, there is significant diversity in the age of not-for-profits with the oldest organisation founded in 1696 and the youngest just three years ago.

Sample Size: 731

As illustrated in Figure 5 below, the Law, Advocacy and Politics subsector is on average the youngest, while Education and Research organisations are the oldest. Of the 35 organisations in the Education and Research subsample, four were founded over 100 years ago. Larger organisations tend to be older; the average age of organisations with total incoming resources exceeding €1 million is 28.1 years.

Sample Size: 731

3.3 Income of Organisations

The majority of organisations in the not-for-profit sector are extremely small; over 40% of the sample had an income of less than $\leq 100,000$ in 2013. As seen in Figure 6, only 12% of the sample had an income exceeding ≤ 1 million.

Sample Size: 856

Figure 7 shows the income of each organisation when ordered alphabetically. The bottom of the graph is the most densely populated due to the high number of small organisations, while the large-scale organisations feature intermittently. There is clear disparity of income between the lowest and highest income brackets within the not-for-profit sector, with a number of particularly small and extremely large organisations featuring in our sample.

Sample Size: 851

The heterogeneous nature of the sector is also clear in the Summary Statistics in Table 2. For the main sample, although the average income is $\pounds 2,760,211$, the median is just $\pounds 152,882$ showing that a few large organisations are inflating the average figure. Only 6% of organisations have income above the average figure. This pattern is also evident for the sample of organisations with total incoming resources exceeding $\pounds 1$ million; only 13% have an income above the average figure.

Table 2: Summary Statistics – Income, 2013
Main Sample		Sample of Organisations with
		Total Incoming Resources

% Above Average	6%	13%
% Below Average	94%	87%
Sample Size	856	175

3.4 Estimated Contribution to GNP

The organisations in our main sample had a combined income of $\pounds 2.36$ billion in 2013. As these organisations are an approximately representative sample, this number can be extrapolated to the entire sector. As the sector is heterogeneous, a small number of very large organisations have the potential to skew the aggregate figures. In order to reduce the possibility of overestimation the top 1% of organisations were removed from extrapolation². Due to the bottom-heavy nature of the sector, an estimation of size is only possible at this time. In order to report a definitive size of the market, more accurate and reliable data is needed. With these caveats in place, it is suggested that the Irish not-for-profit sector had an income of $\pounds 12.4$ billion in 2013. Irish GNP was $\pounds 137$ billion in 2013 (CSO, 2014), suggesting that the not-for-profit sector contributed 9.1% to the Irish economy. While an approximation, the authors note that this figure remains within the region of previous research; the 1999 Johns Hopkins study yielded higher figures of 8.2% of GDP and 9.3% of GNP in 1995 (Donoghue et al., 1999).

3.5 State Income

Irish not-for-profit organisations have a very high reliance on state income, as seen in Figure 8 below. While there are many organisations in the not-for-profit sector that do not receive state income, for those that do, an average contribution of 63.3% of total income was identified. The Development and Housing subsector and Law, Advocacy and Politics organisations are the most reliant on the state, while Social Service organisations and the Education and Research subsector are those most likely to source funding elsewhere. No information on state funding was provided by any group in the Religious subsector. However, this does not necessarily mean that they receive no income from the State or EU; it may mean that they simply do not indicate this explicitly in their accounts.

² The 99% of organisations below this threshold were multiplied by \approx 12.5 to estimate the total market size. Organisations above this threshold were then added to the total figure. As such, these large organisations appear only once.

Organisations with total incoming resources exceeding €1 million appear to be somewhat less reliant on state or EU funding, with this form of income accounting for 54.7% of total receipts. This finding is slightly higher to that of the Wheel (2014), which found that the state grants/contracts (local, national and EU) account for 53% of income in 2011/2012. The U.K Almanac found that for less than one in ten organisations (9%) statutory bodies are the majority provider of their income (National Council for Voluntary Organisations, 2015).

Sample Size: 342

3.6 Change in State Income (2012 to 2013)

On average, state funding as a proportion of total income reduced by 1%. Specific sectors show a different pattern however; state income as a proportion of total income fell by 6.5% for Law, Advocacy and Politics organisations, and by 5.8% for Environmental organisations. The Education and Research sector as well as Social Services also saw a reduction in receipts from these sources.

Sample Size: 302

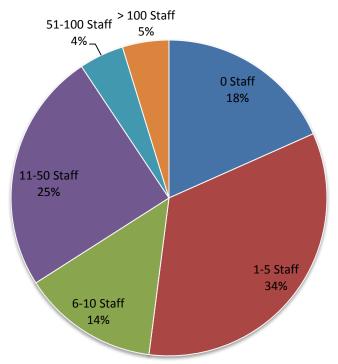

While the not-for-profit sector experienced a reduction in state funding in 2013, the rate of reduction appears to be stabilising. Between 2008 and 2012, Harvey (2012) identified an overall reduction of 2.82% in state income with a reduction of 2.2% between 2011 and 2012. The state funding landscape is set to change, however, with the implementation of the Public Service Reform Plan (2014-2016). In line with the Public Service Reform Plan 2014-2016, 'the Public Service must begin to transition away from the traditional system of block grants to organisations providing public services and move instead to a new approach based on releasing funds in return for delivering specified outcomes' (Department of Public Expenditure and Reform, 2014: 15). Such measures may impact on the proportion of state funding received by the sector and for specific subsectors.

3.7 Staff

Similar to previous versions of this study, most organisations included in this sample have very few paid staff members or none at all, with just over half employing five or less. Only 9% of not-for-profits have more than 50 staff.

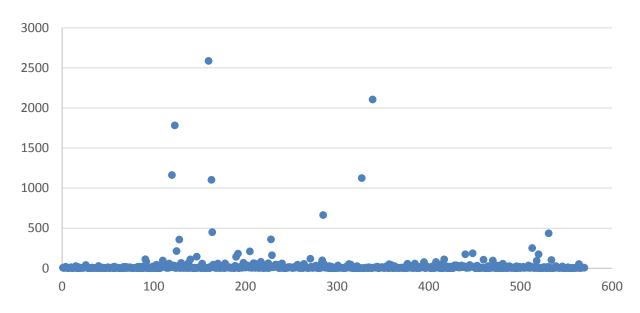

Sample Size: 567

The diversity of the sector can again be seen in Figure 11. Similar to the income of the sector, the majority of organisations rest at the bottom of the graph. There are some clear outliers however, with the greatest staffed organisation consisting of 2,585 employees.

Sample Size: 570

On average, organisations have about 36 staff members, a number just over seven times that of the median of 5. Only 11% of organisations have staff levels above the average. As would be expected, larger organisations have more staff, but they also show the same diverse pattern, with an average figure of 77 and a median of just 31.

Table 3: Summary Statistics – Staff
	Main Sample	Sample of Organisations with Income Exceeding €1 million
Average	36	77
Median	5	31
% Above Average	11.6%	18.2%
% Below Average	88.7%	81.8%
Sample Size	567	154

3.8 Salaries

Staff costs are a major component of spending for not-for-profit organisations, accounting for an average of 45% of total expenditure. Salary costs vary across subsector, with just over 60 cent out of every euro spent on salaries in Health organisations. International organisations and Development and Housing organisations have a very low salary expenditure ratio, at 14% and 29% respectively. Both sectors include very large organisations; therefore these findings may be due to economies of scale.

Sample Size: 503

Larger organisations appear to benefit from economies of scale in relation to employment costs, with salaries accounting for 36% of total expenditure. The pattern is similar when compared to the main data, with the lowest ratio found for International organisations (21%). Comparatively, the highest salary expenditure ratio for large organisations was in Social Services (71%).

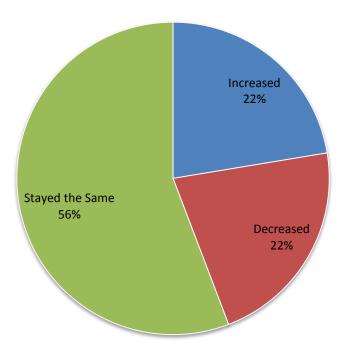

Sample Size: 158

3.9 Change in Staff Numbers (2012 to 2013)

The majority of organisations' staff numbers stayed the same between 2012 and 2013, as seen in Figure 14. A similar number of organisations' staff numbers either increased or decreased during this time; 115 organisations reported a reduction in staff while 118 reported growth in staff numbers.

Sample Size: 529

Comparatively, more positions were created per organisation when compared to those that were lost. Figure 15 illustrates that between 2012 and 2013, a net of 60 jobs were created; 591 lost and 651 created. Staff levels have remained steady, with a 0.4% increase in employment between 2012 and 2013.

4 Fundraising

4.1 Fundraised Income

Internationally, Ireland is viewed as having a highly generous population. The World Giving Index has consistently ranked Ireland in the Top 5 most charitable nations. In 2012 and 2013, Ireland was ranked the most generous nation in Europe (Charities Aid Foundation, 2012 and 2013). The country's relationship with charity has been found to be consistent; from 2008-2013 the proportion of the population giving to charity has been 70% or over, with the frequency of donating increasing from 70% in 2012 to 74% in 2013. This section of the report analyses fundraised income received by our sample of not-for-profits.

As indicated in Section 2, many sets of accounts are aggregated so that fundraised income is subsumed under the 'total income' figure. Only a small number of organisations in our sample gave additional information. It is on this small group that the analysis is carried out. As such, the results are no longer necessarily representative of the experiences of the entire sector.

Figure 16 shows the breakdown of fundraised income across the different subsectors. Similar to previous versions of this report (see 2into3, 2014), Social Services and International subsectors were found to be especially prolific fundraisers in 2013; combined, they account for nearly €7.50 out of every €10 raised. While Culture and Recreation organisations only contribute 5.2% of total fundraised income, this subsector's potential may not be fully reached as sport is currently excluded from the remit of the 2009 Charities Act. While sport plays a significant role in Irish society a with over 500,000 Irish adults volunteering each year, the Federation of Irish Sport cites that sport is at a significant disadvantage compared to other subsectors that qualify for charitable status when it comes to accessing philanthropic support (Federation of Irish Sport, 2013).

Sample Size: 379

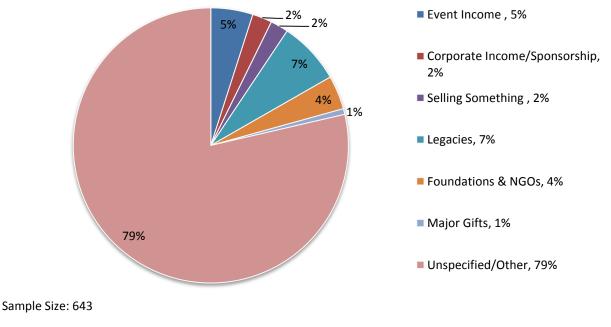

4.2 Fundraising Composition

A wide range of techniques are used to raise funds in the not-for-profit sector. These include direct mail, running events, soliciting large gift donations and selling items. Implementation of each of these requires a different skillset, time commitment and cost. Each organisation must identify what range of fundraising techniques best meets their funding needs and capacity, measured in terms of overall income. The composition of the fundraising mix is also dependent on the subsector and the specific cause of the organisation.

As can be seen in Figure 17, nearly 80% of donations are unspecified in the sample's annual accounts. Thus, while this form of fundraised income is included in the analysis, further detail as to the type of donation or method used is unknown. For fundraising methods that have been specified in the annual accounts of this sample of not-for-profits, contributions from legacies are significant; accounting for 7% of total fundraised income. In addition, event income and trusts and foundations feature strongly, generating 5% and 4% of this form of income respectively. Donations received from legacies appear to be increasing when compared to previous versions of this study, while major gifts and corporate income continue to account for a very small proportion of total receipts.

The reported income from legacies is received by less than ten organisations. The average legacy in this sample totals over ≤ 1.2 m. Similarly, legacies account for £2 billion (11%) of total fundraised income in the U.K but just over 8.4% of organisations received this form of donation, amounting to an average of £169,000 per organisation in 2012/13 (National Council for Voluntary Organisations, 2015).

For those organisations with income exceeding ≤ 1 million, a slightly smaller proportion of donations are received from unspecified sources. This may be because larger organisations engage in more detailed financial reporting. Selling something raises a higher proportion of income for larger organisations in this sample, accounting for just over ≤ 1 of every ≤ 10 raised. Corporate income is also higher in larger organisations when compared to the main sample. Larger organisations may receive higher levels of income from selling something and corporates as a result of scale, with both methods involving lengthy preparation and cultivation time.

Sample Size: 195

27 large-scale organisations responded to our survey and provided data on their fundraising mix. From these responses, a total of 90 observations were made. Figure 19 shows the distribution of fundraised income by technique in 2013. Similar to the findings above, the majority of fundraised income is derived from relationships, in particular, regular giving (26%) and direct marketing appeals (21%). The Wheel (2014) reported that in 2011/2012, there was an interest in the not-for-profit sector to move away from event-type fundraising towards the use of standing orders/direct debits and online giving.

Sample Size: 90

Similarly, individual donations dominate the U.S fundraising mix. According to the recent Giving USA report, individual donations made up 72% of US contributions in 2013; an increase of 4.2% compared to 2012 (Indiana University Lilly Family School of Philanthropy, 2014). Several factors reportedly influenced this growth, including a 2.9% increase in personal income, a lower unemployment rate, a 1.9% increase in personal disposable income and rising consumer confidence (Indiana University Lilly Family School of Philanthropy, 2014). There is a notable difference in the proportion of total fundraised income received from trusts and foundations in the U.S when compared to the survey respondents in this sample. Foundations are much more prominent in the U.S, accounting for 15% of fundraised income compared to 9% in Ireland. In the U.S, income from corporates yields fewest receipts (5%); a decrease of 1.9% compared to previous years. The Indiana University Lilly Family School of Philanthropy (2014) cite this decline due to slow growth in corporate pre-tax profits in 2013.

Source: Indiana University Lilly Family School of Philanthropy, 2014

Individual donations were also found to dominate the U.K fundraising mix, totalling £7 billion in 2012/2013 (National Council for Voluntary Organisations, 2015). However, as seen in Figure 21, trusts and foundations are becoming increasingly prominent, accounting for 13.7% of fundraised income in 2012/2013. This signifies a rate of growth over twice that compared to the U.S (Pharoah et al., 2014). In light of the ONE Foundation ceasing funding in 2013 and The Atlantic Philanthropies spending down in an effort to finish grant making by 2016, Irish not-for-profits should consider identifying appropriate funding opportunities within the estimated 8,000 trusts and foundations in the U.K. Legacies account for a similar proportion of fundraised income when compared to the survey respondents in this sample; contributing just over £1 of every £10 raised.

Source: Pharoah et al., (2014)

While the proportion of fundraised income received in the U.K is somewhat similar to 27 large organisations that responded to our survey, disparities emerge when illustrated on a per capita basis; legacy giving per capita in the U.K is \notin 36.70 compared to \notin 14.51 in Ireland. Moreover, trusts and foundations account for \notin 44.09 per capita in the U.K whereas in Ireland, this method amounts to \notin 14.51³. There are a number of reasons as to why giving levels are higher in the U.K compared to Ireland, with Table 4 below outlining similarities and differences with these respective fundraising landscapes.

³ Per capita estimations are for illustrative purposes only and are not based on a representative sample

	Tax Schemes Benefit Charities and UK Donors
	: Tax Relief; charity receives a re-grossed tax refund at 31% through the Charitable Donations Scheme. Minimum donation €250. No personal tax benefit for the donor; this has been viewed as regressive (The Community Foundation for Ireland, 2015). Pre 2013 self-assessed taxpayers could claim tax relief. It is estimated that around 1,500 charities benefit from the scheme.
UK:	Tax Relief; charity receives a re-grossed tax refund (20%) for gifts over £100 through Gift Aid. Personal tax benefit of 20% refund if the donor pays tax at the higher rate (40%). It is estimated that around 64,000 charities benefit from the scheme. In addition, the Gift Aid Small Donations Scheme allows a charity to claim 25% tax refund on cash donations of £20 or less.
IRL:	Inheritance; Donations are exempt from gift tax and inheritance tax. Charities in receipt are exempt from paying tax donation.
	Inheritance; an estate pays inheritance tax at the rate of 36% (instead of 40%) provided 10% or more of the net value of the estate is left to a charity. Charities are exempt from capital gains tax.
	Corporate Donations; a company may claim a deduction for a charitable donation at the 12.5% corporation rate of tax i.e. €1000 donation costs €875.
UK:	Corporate Donations; after making a charitable donation, a company may deduct the value of the donation from the total business profits before paying tax.
IRL:	Payroll Giving; administered by Charitable Giving U.K through the Sustain scheme. Employees can donate a minimum of €6 per month to charity. Charities can benefit from tax concessions on donations of €250 or more.
	Payroll Giving ; £1 donation costs 80p unless the donor pays tax at the higher/additional rate; in which case £1 costs 60p/55p.

4.3 Estimated GDP and Per Capita Equivalent

The total fundraised income of our sample totalled ≤ 131 million in 2013. As these organisations are an approximately representative sample, this number can be extrapolated to the entire sector. Only one-third of the sample reported on fundraised income however, resulting in a small proportion of the entire sector being included in this analysis. Similar to the estimated contribution to GNP, this figure discounts the top 1% of organisations⁴. Due to the diversity of this form of income as well as a lack of consistent reporting, any figure presented on market size is an estimate and should be viewed with caution. With these caveats in place, it is estimated that the Irish not-for-profit sector had a fundraised income of ≤ 740 million in 2013⁵. Irish GDP was ≤ 162 billion in 2013 (CSO, 2014), suggesting that fundraised income is equal to 0.46% of this amount. The not-for-profit contribution to GDP is very small when compared to the U.S contribution of 2% in 2013 (Indiana University Lilly Family School of Philanthropy, 2014). The authors note however that the U.S not-for-profit and charitable giving landscape is much larger compared to Ireland.

It is estimated that Ireland's rate of giving per capita was ≤ 161 in 2013. Again, this is lower than the U.K and the U.S, at ≤ 321 and ≤ 765 respectively and indicates that although Irish people give frequently, the scale of giving is lower than our international counterparts. As Table 5 illustrates, the U.K's charitable giving is nearly double per capita compared to Ireland, while the U.S gives over four times more.

Table 5: Summary Statistics – Estimated GDP and per Capita Equivalent, 2012

⁴ The 99% of organisations below this threshold were multiplied by \approx 12.5 to estimate the total market size. Organisations above this threshold were then added to the total figure. As such, these large organisations appear only once

4.4 Fundraising Costs

It is essential that not-for-profit organisations fundraise in an efficient, professional manner in order to maximise the benefit to the cause, the impact of an individual donation and to ensure a positive public image. Many organisations are nervous about disclosing administrative, overhead and fundraising costs to the public, especially following the series of scandals to hit the charity sector in recent years. A lack of public trust was apparent in 2013; 62% of over 1,000 individuals hanged their perception of Irish charities in light of controversies surrounding the use of public and fundraised income (Amárach Irish Charities Research, 2014).

However, appropriate investment in overheads and staff are required to ensure on-going organisational efficiency, effectiveness and sustainability, and to attract and retain staff. Moreover, transparency surrounding the costs of fundraising is necessary to re-build public confidence and trust. Zero fundraising costs are an illusion. Thus, although low fundraising and low administration costs are clearly desirable in a not-for-profit organisation, the relationship between efficiency and cost ratios is in no way linear. As such, this paper should not be perceived or interpreted as equating low fundraising costs with organisational effectiveness or organisational quality. Rather, it aims to reflect the current reality of the not-for-profit sector in Ireland, providing Boards, CEOs and Fundraising Executives with information which they can use to identify their own standing among their peers, whilst remaining mindful of the wide range of factors which impact upon an organisation's administration costs and fundraising performance.

More practical limitations of the summary 'cost to raise a euro' measure include:

- In general, and especially for this study, the figures are grounded in poor quality data. As noted earlier, many accounts are highly aggregated making it difficult for information on fundraising costs or income to be extracted.
- 2. Many activities undertaken by not-for-profits may have fundraising outcomes but not be explicitly fundraising activities. For example, advertisements run to educate the public about a particular disease, or campaigning to have a particular law changed, may also have the effect of raising awareness about the organisation and their work.

- 3. Large annual fluctuations are a common feature of fundraising activities. This can be due to large one-off donations or an investment in a new fundraising technique which can be expensive initially but pays off over subsequent years. As such, figures which capture the fundraising cost at one point in time may not be representative of an organisation's actual position.
- 4. Fundraising costs are correlated with a range of organisational characteristics. For instance, larger fundraising departments have a number of advantages over smaller ones. In particular, they can often afford to employ full-time, professional fundraisers. In smaller bodies, the fundraising duties are often distributed between all other staff.
- 5. There is also a relationship between an organisation's age and their fundraising costs. Newer organisations are often driven by highly dedicated, passionate volunteers, leading to low fundraising costs. However, newly established bodies do not have the networks, reputation, working relationships, clients, and proven ability to reside in the public's consciousness. All of these factors assist older organisations in obtaining funds. Younger organisations may therefore have to spend more money in order to build donor bases and establish organisational routines and staff strengths. In addition, certain sources of funding, especially legacies and bequests, generally require a long cultivation period and are less often available to younger groups. Existing research suggests that fundraising costs start off very low, increase as an organisation formalises and fall again when it has undergone a significant learning curve.
- 6. Fundraising efficiency tends to vary quite significantly across different subsectors. Certain causes are, by their nature, easier to engage with potential donors, while some more marginal causes, or those with a stigma attached, may find it more difficult to fundraise. This reflects nothing more than the base level of public interest in the cause and is generally outside an individual organisation's control.

Very few organisations provide both cost and income data in relation to their different fundraising technique. It should be emphasised that despite a sample size of 872, only 44 observations were available. These observations are across 37 organisations. Thus, this fundraising cost, and subsequent figures are, at best, estimates based on a small, non-random, sample and should be viewed with caution. With these caveats in place, this study found that it costs an estimated 28 cent to raise one euro of fundraised income in Ireland. For 27 large scale organisations, economies of scale were identified and an estimated cost of 23 cent established.

The costs of raising money varies across fundraising technique, as can be seen below, with selling items being especially costly followed by events; a finding consistently reported in previous versions of this report (see 2into3 2013; 2014). Of the techniques for which we have data, it appears that corporate fundraising is the most cost effective. However, major gifts have been excluded as there is not sufficient information on major gifts we cannot make a comparison.

Sample Size: 44

For the 27 large organisations that responded to our survey the cost of fundraised income is lower than that of the main sample. This is expected as large organisations can benefit from economies of scale. As illustrated in Figure 23, legacies and regular and committed giving appear to be the most cost effective forms of fundraising. The rate of return on investment may explain the prominence of regular giving income within larger organisations. Similar to the main sample, selling something is the costliest method. While direct marketing represents 26% of total fundraised income for larger organisations, the cost of this method is nearly double that of the given average.

4.5 Fundraising Trends

The challenging climate in which the not-for-profit sector now operates is characterised by an increased demand for services without a corresponding increase in income. Instead, the sector's key sources of funding, the state and the public, have faced decreased resources and financial uncertainty.

On average, we find a 0.8% increase in fundraised income between 2012 and 2013. While fundraised income has remained steady, it is important to note that all subsectors and organisations have widely differing experiences and one summary figure does not represent the entire sector⁷. Indeed, while fundraised income has been stable overall, the majority of organisations (57%) experienced a decrease in fundraised income while a small number of organisations received substantial gifts. The Development and Housing subsector experienced the most significant reduction. Fundraised income for Philanthropic Intermediaries and Voluntarism Promotion and the Culture and Recreation subsector has also reduced.

Sample Size: 365

⁷ An organisation's 2012 emergency appeal income was removed for comparative purposes as they did not undertake a similar appeal in 2013.

Previous reports from this series (see 2into3, 2013 and 2014) also report an increase in fundraised income, indicating an ongoing recovery in the sector. Comparatively, charitable giving in the U.S also grew for its fourth consecutive year in 2013. According to the Giving USA report, fundraised income increased by 4.4%, amounting to a total contribution of $335.17 billion (Indiana University Lilly Family School of Philanthropy, 2014). Interestingly, differing experiences of growth are also apparent based on organisational size, with the Blackbaud Charitable Giving Report reporting that smaller organisations with income of less than $1 million experienced a 3.6% growth, while receipts for larger organisations experienced growth of 5.7%. Medium-sized organisations with an income between $1 million and $10 million experienced an increase of 3.8% in fundraised income (MacLaughlin, 2014).

Different experiences were also found between sectors. The Indiana University Lilly Family School of Philanthropy (2014) established the largest growth in Education (9%). A 6% growth was reported in the Health sector, while donations to Human Services grew by 2.2%. The Giving USA report notes that donations to international causes slowed in 2013 due to fewer disaster-relief contributions compared with prior years, while fundraised income for Religious organisations showed no change compared to 2012. Five subsectors were reported to surpass inflation-adjusted giving levels realised prior to the recession; Education, Human Services, Foundations, Health and Environment (Indiana University Lilly Family School of Philanthropy, 2014).

5 Conclusion

This Report is designed to provide those working in, or with interest in, the not-for-profit sector, with an overview of its current status, in 2013. The motivation behind the report is to provide objective information, stimulate debate and discussion and encourage more detailed reporting of fundraising data.

The analysis in this report reveals a sector that contributes 9.1% to Irish GNP. We found that fundraised income has remained steady in 2013, rising by 0.8%, and that there has been a slight reduction in state income. However, these results and all those in the report, whether at a sector or subsector level hide the true level of diversity amongst the experience of not-for-profit organisations in 2013. Whilst empirical research into the third sector is essential to inform the funding targets, to identify best practice and to benchmark the performance of individual entities, CEOs, donors and civil society should remain cognisant of the heterogeneity even within each subsector. Thus, although the results may assist in guiding discussion, the fact that each not-for-profit is so specific and distinct in history, structure, function, staffing levels, sector interest and sources of income, must be to the forefront of any report.

The key results arising from this report are that the Irish not-for-profit sector had a 0.8% increase in fundraised income between 2012 and 2013, signifying ongoing recovery in the sector for the fourth consecutive year. The total income generated from philanthropic sources amounted to \notin 740m in 2013, with the average cost to raise one euro estimated at 28 cent. Irelands giving per capita was \notin 161 in 2013, nearly half that of the U.K, indicating that while the sector shows continuous growth, Ireland has scope to increase its charitable giving by learning from the U.K.

7 Appendix A – Statistical Method

A complete list of the 7,090 not-for-profit organisations registered with the Companies Registration Office was supplied to 2into3 by INKEx in December 2012. Each organisation was categorised into one of 12 subsectors. Where appropriate, a number of organisations from the Philanthropic Intermediaries and Voluntarism Promotion subsector were recategorised. Both incorporated and unincorporated not-for-profit organisations were included for sampling. While this gives a more accurate reflection of the sector, unincorporated organisations are less represented due to difficulty in publically accessing accounts. Three samples were identified; an 8% sample of the entire database, a 26% sample of those organisations with total incoming resources exceeding €1 million and, a sample of 27 larger organisations that responded to a detail survey.

The simplest way to obtain a representative sample is through simple random sampling whereby an appropriate number of organisations are randomly chosen from the population. However, in this study, a more appropriate process called stratified random sampling is used. This involves splitting the population of organisations into the subsectors in which they operate and taking separate random sample from each of the subgroups rather than just taking a single random sample from the entire group. This processes means that the relative size of each subsector is the same in both the sample and the population.

Stratified sampling offers several advantages over simple random sampling.

- A stratified sample can provide greater precision than a simple random sample of the same size.
- A stratified sample can guard against an "unrepresentative" sample (e.g., only large organisations).
- Sufficient sample points can be obtained to support separate analysis of different subsectors.
- It ensures better coverage of the population than simple random sampling.

The two sampling frames for this study are shown in Table 6 and 7. The total population is split into the 12 categories and the proportion of each category in the total population is computed. This figure is used to determine how many from each category should be included in the total sample. For example, 358 not-for-profits in the total population are in the Law, Advocacy and Politics subsector. This is 3.8% of the total ((358/10903)*100~3.8). Once the population was split into its component strata, organisations were randomly chosen for inclusion in the sample.
